Working from a developer's shell within a Grade II listed building in central London, we undertook substantial construction works and fit-out on three levels. A new mezzanine floor was installed to complement the basement and ground floors, allowing the creation of spacious brasserie and fine dining areas together with toilets and services. Works included new ceilings, staircases with glass balustrading, new granite and back-lit corian to the bar, all joinery and finishes and installation of all mechanical and electrical services. The project was completed on time with due regard to the requirements of listed buildings and within the inevitable restrictions of city-centre working.
